Our Mission

To provide specific indigenous cultures and the disadvantaged with an opportunity to voice the truth about their history and the daily struggles they face to be recognized as important members of society. We do this by creating a real collaboration with them; offering to help tell their stories - in their own words - and through our photography, documentary films, interviews, lecture series and a variety of educational materials.

We attempt to offer an educational experience by raising cultural sensitivity through awareness and education on Human Rights. If we successfully change misconceptions and stereotypes, then this will allow the freedom of growth and self-respect of the Human Spirit.

These collaborations, when combined with consistent values and processes, have generated a much greater impact, which are far more sustainable, than simply visiting a remote location and returning home to write one paragraph along with a photo.

Philosophy:

Partnering in a real collaboration enables the people to voice their own truth and history. We take an organic approach with our multi-dimensional collaboration partners. Our joint mission is to promote Human Rights and to offer a cultural educational experience.
